Recently, Pakistan has been trying to push for a UN resolution dealing with “defamation of religion” [they were mainly mad about all those Mohamed jokes]. Pakistani government actually really dislikes not only proselytism, but in fact they discriminate against their own citizens who are not of Muslim faith. Obviously their discrimination against Christians and other religions is outrageous. But we can totally use the Pakistani government’s religious intolerance against Scientology. I bet Scientology in Pakistan does what it did in Israel - dropped the cross and the word “church” from its name. So no need contacting the extremists - the government will do. Oh wait - they are one and the same in most cases.

Speaking for myself [as an Israeli woman], the answer is NO. Arab men hold very different view as to what a woman's role in the family is, and what her duties towards her husband are. They also think that the husband is always right and that they are allowed to beat up the woman. No thanks. Will never happen. And guess what? I'm making 100 000 thousand without having to endure a neanderthal husband. You know why? Because Jewish Israelis encourage [not just allow] their women to study.

I am Jewish and I now want the Simon Wiesenthal Center organization to cease to exist for selling out their principles of what they are supposed to represent FOR MONEY. So YES it helps to perpetuate a bad stereotype of Jews when the Simon Wiesenthal Center organization not only decided to do this but also ignore all those trying to point out how wrong this was. For compromising who they are supposed to be they deserve for the organization to go under! If I were faced with Marvin Hier I would not be able to call him Rabbi because he goes against everything I know a Rabbi is supposed to be and that isn't a money grubbing schmendrick!

On a personal level - my dislike of the ultra-orthodox is so high, that I refuse to work with them on anything. And I suspect that's why liberal parties defend Scientology, without even knowing what it is, just out of spite to the ultra orthodox. Welcome to the crazy politics of Israel. And that's even before the conflict with Palestinians.

Yeah, but Christians were really glorifying a torturous death and becoming martyrs. That's why many of them refused to convert. They thought there were going to heaven for sticking to the faith and dying painfully. Suckers!

I pass through that subway station very often. And Scilons are not the only ones there - there are plenty of other wackos standing there, whether it's the Hispanic preachers, Jehova witnesses or those crazy "the end of the world is coming" people. They are all loud and crazy and very rarely the passers by even stop to pay any attention to them. So that's why I think that holding posters and distributing fliers calmly will do more good than being nasty to those scilons.

I'm also an atheist and always fascinated me why people chose to believe in somethin that clearly makes no sense. Being an Israeli, I actually know the old testament really well and like nothing more than explaining to religious people why I dislike God, as he is described in the old testament. And then they always say - oh, they didn't teach you that chapter right. LOL I can read for myself.

You forgot to make this caricature hold a globe to signify the world dominance of the Jews. And you call this a big nose? Try harder!

I'm planning on committing the crime of blasphemy on #MohammedDay, May 20. It's good not to be living in Kuwait, Afghanistan or Saudi Arabia

Kuwait arrested a man for offending the prophet Mohamed on Tweeter. Who knew that an illiterate desert dweller as Mohamed could read tweets?

Sarai "It has been part of the Muslim's belief, based on traditions, that Prophet Muhammad was illiterate. God says in verse 29:51 that the Quran itself is the only miracle of the prophet. By alleging illiteracy for him, traditional Muslims were trying to make the claim even "more miraculous," for a book of such literary quality was sent down through an illiterate man."

Kim Loss Oh, I wasn't questioning it. The truth is too funny, and religious types aren't known for their sense of humor.

Sarai True, but Muslims appear to be particularly thin-skinned. Zapiro got it exactly right in his caricature for Everybody Draw Mohamed day three years ago:
